Housing benefit can help you pay the rent on your home.

You don't need to be receiving other benefits to be eligible.

You can also get housing benefit if you are working but have a low income.

The amount of housing benefit you will get mainly depends on your income and your rent, and on rules that limit the maximum housing benefit you can receive.

If you rent your home from a private landlord, the maximum you can get is limited to the local housing allowance (LHA) rates for the area in which you live. The maximum rate varies from area to area.

Your council can tell you what the LHA rates are for your area. Alternatively, you can find them on the internet either in the Housing Benefit section of www.gov.uk or in the LHA section of www.voa.gov.uk.

Shared accommodation rate

If you are under 35 and single, the maximum housing benefit you can receive is the LHA shared accommodation rate (the rate for a room in a shared house). This is the case even if you rent a house or flat on your own.

If you could afford the rent when you moved in and you have not claimed housing benefit in the past year, this restriction will not apply for the first 13 weeks of your claim.

Exceptions to the rule

The shared accommodation rate will also not apply if you live alone and:

- you are under 22 and have spent time in care since your 16th birthday
- you have a severe disability

- you are entitled to an extra bedroom for a non-resident carer
- you have spent at least three months in a hostel for homeless people (this can include women's refuges and drug rehab hostels, and doesn't have to be in one stay) and have accepted resettlement support (this applies to 25- to 34-year-olds only)
- you have left prison and you are subject to 'Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements' (this applies to 25- to 34-year-olds only).

Other situations

The shared accommodation rate will not apply if you are under 35 and:

- live with a partner, or
- have a child who lives with you, or
- have a non-dependant who lives with you, or
- you rent from a housing association or the council.

However, the shared accommodation rate will apply if you live with your partner in accommodation shared with other people.

Students

Most people can claim housing benefit but you may not be entitled to it if you are a full-time student.
